

Effective Internal Audit Performance Measures: capturing influence and impact

John Chesshire

Course Description

Organisational performance management is vitally important and can provide early indication of successes and warning of potential failure.

And our Global Internal Audit Standards have set a new obligation for us. Standard 12.2, Performance Measurement states that “The chief audit executive must develop objectives to evaluate the internal audit function’s performance. The chief audit executive must consider the input and expectations of the board and senior management when developing the performance objectives. The chief audit executive must develop a performance measurement methodology to assess progress toward achieving the function’s objectives and to promote the continuous improvement of the internal audit function”.

But what should we be considering when we think about our own performance as internal audit teams? What measures, metrics or key performance indicators (KPIs) should we consider?

What could an internal audit Balanced Scorecard look like?

Internal audit should be outcome-driven, advising on emerging risk, promoting behavioural change and informing strategic decisions. Yet it’s commonplace for our performance measures to be input-based or focus, to excess, on our own internal processes and tasks.

This highly interactive course will look at the typical performance measures used by audit leaders and ask if they are adding any value to our stakeholders.

It will help you assess your own team’s performance measures and offer you a range of ideas to - potentially - help you rethink and redesign your team’s approach in this critical area and better meet stakeholder expectations.

Who should attend?

Chief audit executives, internal audit managers and senior internal auditors who are thinking about how best to measure the performance, success and added value of their internal audit service.

It is particularly relevant for those wanting to review, critique and refine their own KPIs and those considering alternative ways of assessing their performance and impact on their organisation.

Course programme

This course will take you through a blend of theoretical, technical, discursive and practical approaches covering:

- a brief refresher covering performance measurement and management
- quality assurance and improvement
- typical internal audit performance measures
- the challenges associated with traditional internal audit performance measures
- quantity, quality, cost and time measures
- the balanced scorecard
- what gets measured gets done
- managing the risks
- bringing your stakeholders with you
- measuring what matters most

The course includes facilitator input, short practical discussions and a small number of task-based exercises to encourage you to review, develop and - potentially - improve your internal audit performance measures, metrics or KPIs.
